- The change in J.E.B. Stuart High School's population reflects the change in the population of the entire United States.
- Before 1965 most immigrants to the United States came from Europe.
- Today, 60 percent of immigrants come from Asia, Africa, the Caribbean, and Latin America.
- When immigrants arrive, they often must work lower-paying jobs because they lack training and higher education or because they do not speak English.
- For one high school student, originally from the Asian country of Vietnam, moving to the United States offered a lot of opportunity.
- Special counselors who speak a variety of languages are also available to help students communicate with teachers.
- Beliefs and ways of doing almost everything—eating, communicating, celebrating special occasions—vary among countries.
- Sometimes this lack of understanding makes people stay only with people just like themselves. Sometimes it leads to conflict.

- Students at J.E.B. Stuart learn a lot about tolerance.
- Tolerance is the ability to get along with people who have different cultures, religions, values, and opinions.
- Coming from rich cultures, many of the students from other countries appreciate the heritage of their cultures and want to keep their traditions.
- "I'm forgetting Arabic. I can feel it fading away," she says.

B. While You Read

Read "Diversity in the United States," about students at J.E.B. Stuart High School in Falls Church, Virginia (U.S.A.).* Write down as many answers as you can find in the article for:

- What difficulties do immigrants face when they go to the United States?
- What can be done to make the adjustment to life in America easier?

C. After You Read

- Compare your notes for Part B with a partner. Make a chart like the one below matching the problems immigrants face with the help they receive.

Problems	Solutions
Cannot speak English	ESL classes offered

- Ask, answer and discuss the following questions with your partner or group.

- Do you believe enough is being done to assist immigrants with their adjustment to life in the United States? Why or why not?
- Do you think most immigrants recognize the range of problems they will face in going to the United States, or are they chasing a dream? Why?
- Can you think of any reasons why some native-born Americans are against allowing a lot of immigrants into America? What might they be?
